Legal aid introduces tiered tariffs for lawyers

Vancouver, BC — A new three-tiered system of tariff rates uses experience and type of service as the basis for paying lawyers who represent legal aid clients.

The Legal Services Society (LSS) brought in the rates as part of its ongoing commitment to tariff renewal. Lawyers' experience will be based on the year of their call to the bar. Tiered rates will apply to accounts received on or after February 15, 2006.

"The three-tiered system is designed to better reflect the skills and expertise lawyers gain with experience," said LSS Executive Director Mark Benton.

"It also reflects standard compensation practices in the legal profession, where billing rates tend to increase with seniority. We hope the tiered-rates will encourage senior lawyers to continue accepting legal aid referrals, and attract newer lawyers with the expectation of future increases as they gain experience," he said.

The tiered rates are:

Tier	Years of call	Compensation rate
1	Less than 4 years	Published tariff rate ( Guide to Legal Aid Tariffs )
2	4 to less than 10 years	Tier 1 rate plus 5 %
3	10 or more years	Tier 1 rate plus 10 %

Tiers 2 and 3 will apply to most tariff items listed in the society's Guide to Legal Aid Tariffs. Disbursements, duty counsel and circuit counsel, criminal enhanced fees and criminal category 1 and 2 offenses will continue to be paid at the published tariff rates for all lawyers.

Tiered rates were among the recommendations in the report Managing for Results: LSS Tariff Renewal. The report was released in December 2005 after LSS conducted an extensive review of the system governing the work lawyers are paid for and their rates of pay.

As this system represents a new approach to lawyer compensation, LSS will evaluate it over time and make adjustments as appropriate.
